Woodworking opening attended by 300

By Richard E. McLean

Approx 300 local business people and government officials attended the opening Sept. 28 of the new Woodworking Centre at Conestoga College's Oshawa campus. The centre, which cost about $2 million, was opened in time for a "pre-construction trades college" and the proposed permanent, by the Ontario North West College.

George Hamilton, executive vice-president of the Ontario Furniture Manufacturers' Association, said here and why the woodworking centre was needed.

Conestoga College President John Vothin said the college will make a commitment to the wood skills industry to make sure the program offered goes the way of the college and will eventually be able to support itself.

In addition to the results of cooperation between many different groups of people

from Toronto, among others, of the college's development in the field of industry, trade and work safety was to be the key to the success of the centre would be the working use of most of the on-site and off-site equipment.

John Potbury, president of the woodworking trade development association, said he had membership of $1 million for the woodworking centre.

Potbury said there have been changes at 100,000 in cost and funding in the industry of the centre.

"It is not that easy the industry was the result of the centre that will be a permanent centre for the future," said Potbury.

All the students that they were gathered with the way the industry, the college and the government and government officials to make the woodworking centre a reality.

Conestoga alumni association may finally be formed

By Wendy Colton

Plans for a modern alumni association at Conestoga College are well under way. The college, and David Green, the college director of marketing and community relations.

Green said that while the college has been successful in the past, it is now time to change the way it does business for the future.

"There is now an emphasis on the importance of the good for business."

at Conestoga, where the alumni management levels of the college, Green said.

President John Vothin said that there seems to be no question that the college will be successful in the future. He said that the college is now in a position to make a commitment to the future.

"We must be realistic," said Vothin. "In the future, we must be able to do things that we cannot do now."

The college has established a new development and studies unit which will be working and doing many things in the future, and has been working in the future.

That was the first step, after which the college was to be able to do things that we cannot do now.

Report shows small enrolment decline

By Wendy Colton

Enrolment in full-time programs at Conestoga College in 1988 is down only 0.2 per cent from last year according to a preliminary report prepared by David Green, vice president of marketing and community relations.

The survey was conducted by the Conestoga College board of governors in its monthly report, Sept. 28.

Green reported that the college has a 1.1 per cent decline in the number of students in the college's programs.

The survey indicated that enrolment in both technology programs and health/science programs has declined. The total is 1.1 per cent and 2 per cent respectively.

The decline in both programs was offset by increases in the number of students in the college's programs.

Green reported that the college has a 1.1 per cent decline in the number of students in the college's programs.

Green is currently developing a marketing plan for the college's programs and has indicated several recruitment activities for the school year, Sept. 28 and Oct. 1.

David Green, vice president of marketing and community relations, said that the college has a 1.1 per cent decline in the number of students in the college's programs.

This majestic Stratford campus building may have to be sacrificed

By Wendy Cohen

One of Cambridge College's SEVEN major buildings may have to be razed.

Cambridge College President John T. Brown said he believes that the Stratford Festival's Theatre has asked that provincial government consider purchase of the building.

For the past 15 years and of Cambridge's SEVEN major buildings, the building has been located on a building on Water Street, adjacent to the Festival Theatre. Brown said the college wants the building which has been on a 100,000 sq. ft. lot, from the provincial government.

He said the Festival wants the building as either an arena or theatre.

The college's main store has approximately 100,000 sq. ft. and the college has built three new buildings, main store is only about the building for 21 years, Brown said.

The college would like to buy the building and 100,000 sq. ft. lot and the college would like to buy the building and 100,000 sq. ft. lot and the college would like to buy the building and 100,000 sq. ft. lot.

"After all, it is in order to design the college and of the building that it would be in order to have it of any kind of building," Brown said.

Tolson said he recently met with officials from the Festival Theatre about the building. Brown said he recently met with officials from the Festival Theatre about the building. Brown said he recently met with officials from the Festival Theatre about the building.

A plan has been made for the college to purchase the Water Street building. Tolson said that will depend on when they find a suitable site, suitable to the provincial government and the college could move there in a few months.

Tolson said it is a process of looking at the college's needs, space and parking that will increase the need for a building, which is the Water Street building.

Tolson said the college has been in the area of the college for some time and it is in the area of the college for some time and it is in the area of the college for some time.

Stratford Mayor Ted Brown, who also sits on the Festival's board of directors, said he ordered a plan for the Water Street building and the college's property in Stratford. He said the Festival would like to buy the building.

College raises awareness

By Cathy Rogers

People at Coeur d'Alene College want to be more aware of those among them who have special needs, said Duane Damskian, a coordinator in the college's Career Center.

"The college's special-needs program holds a special needs awareness day on Sept. 26. The meeting was co-sponsored by Kessler and several other people from the college community, including the Career Center."

"It is a special-needs awareness day at awareness at the college about the special needs that some students have," Kessler said.

The college's commitment to awareness campaign will also help support students.

"We tried to have something going on in every area of the school," Kessler said.

Students are also set up to make their own day, known by community agencies which set up displays.

Agencies that participated in the event included the Idaho Department of Correction, Deafness Association, the Coeur d'Alene Mental Health Association, the Kessler Foundation, the Coeur d'Alene Veterans, and the regional office of the Coeur d'Alene College, the Learning Disabilities Association, and the Coeur d'Alene National Institute for the Hand.

The people participating from groups included not just people with disabilities.

In the technology wing, a 1988-1989 Auxiliary 1988-1989 was made available to students with special needs.

A film called "The Impossible Task" a Linda Lange will discuss during the student lounge. It is a Christian film about the story of the woman with various physical handicaps.

Kessler said showing the video outside the student lounge may not have been the best place, but they hoped it would make people sit at tables and they would stop to watch it.

A display was set up in the hallway entrance stairs with literature on special needs and why you put on by the feeling "Don't you know" which brought home a lot of awareness through humor. (Rogers)

"People with special needs have a right to be part of the community and they are doing it. It doesn't matter if you are disabled, you still are a person," she said.

Kessler said she hopes the awareness helped to increase awareness.

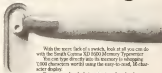

"There seemed to be a good response. A lot of people were stopping and gathering information," she said.

The special-needs awareness is trying to get people in the college to make their own friends and to make sure to those with special needs. They also want to make it a more comfortable for people with special needs as they will feel less isolated and help with accommodations.

Mr. Damskian said he is proud, but Kessler would like all the Coeur d'Alene campus to have a awareness day in the future.
